

Technical Assistance Services

at the Center for Autism and Related Disorders

A collaboration between the Maryland State Department of Education and Kennedy Krieger Institute's Center for Autism and Related Disorders (CARD)

With the goal of improving student outcomes across the state, the Maryland State Department of Education, Division of Special Education/Early Intervention Services, is pleased to offer technical assistance through its collaboration with the Center for Autism and Related Disorders at Kennedy Krieger Institute.

Available to local infant and toddler programs and school systems that are facing challenges in serving children with autism spectrum disorders (ASD), technical assistance services help education programs maximize their potential and success. Provided by staff from the Center for Autism and Related Disorders, these services may include targeted training, consultation, guided practice, and observation for those directly involved in teaching and supporting the developmental and educational needs of children with ASD in early intervention and classroom settings.
