

Quick Facts: Accommodations

Post-concussion supports and accommodations

Some students benefit from short-term accommodations to support them as they get back to school.

Identify a "point person" at school (e.g. guidance counselor, administrator, school nurse) to help inform the student's teachers of their injury and accommodations. The point person can help make a plan to complete missed work.

Students do not have to use accommodations, especially if they begin to feel better and no longer feel the accommodations are needed.

A student's use of short-term accommodations does not affect their class placement (i.e. AP, GT) or college acceptances.

Students typically do not need a formal 504 plan to manage concussion symptoms, as they usually resolve within days to months.
